

Eugène Ysaÿe: an inventory of the available orchestra materials<sup>1</sup>

In 2014, the Orchestre Philharmonique Royal de Liège began recording the complete works for orchestra of Eugène Ysaÿe. Two CDs from Musique en Wallonie are already out under the direction of Jean-Jacques Kantorow<sup>2</sup> <sup>3</sup> with others to follow.

In preparation for these recordings, my work as librarian of the Orchestre Philharmonique Royal de Liège has led to a great deal of research. As a result of the many requests that I have received, it seemed to me of interest to share the tentative results which are already substantial.

Indeed, if the sonatas for solo violin and certain pieces of chamber music constitute part of the repertory of all professional violinists, the orchestral works are rarely played, if not unknown. The reason was that no material was available from any editor until Scores Reformed reedited certain works at the request of the Orchestre Philharmonique Royal de Liège in 2015!

During the life of Eugène Ysaÿe, certain scores were published by Schott-Bruxelles. During this period, the Schott firm, much as Breitkopf in fact, had an important subsidiary in Brussels. In 1989, the editing branch of Schott-Bruxelles shut down and the parent company did not recover the orchestral works of Eugène Ysaÿe, apart from the piano transcriptions which are still available. I made inquiries at Schott-Mainz about the eventual existence of materials in their archives. Unfortunately, there is no trace of any.

Antoine Ysaye began publishing his father's works. Certain of these are the only scores available today. This is the case for the material of the Sérénade pour violoncelle, op.22 and the Fantaisie pour violon, op.32.

Up until the 60's, certain works were played regularly and even recorded (under the direction of David Oistrach, René Defossez or Alfred Dubois among others). Many of these recordings were interpreted by the orchestra of the INR (the Belgian broadcasting company of the time). I was able to leaf through the scant material remaining in the archives. This turned out to consist of old and unreadable and often incomplete photocopies.

I also contacted the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. Eugène Ysaÿe was their permanent conductor from 1918-1922. No score was found in his name.

Still, from the time of his career in the USA, there remain several very interesting manuscripts. I consulted them at the Juilliard School, namely preliminary measures of concertos and the Petit poème romantique, a short piece orchestrated for his son, Gabriel. Today, all these manuscripts are available online.

The best source thus remains Eugène Ysaÿe's personal library which, according to his last wishes, was divided between the Conservatoire Royal de Liège and the Bibliothèque nationale de Belgique. Mr. Jacques Ysaye and Mr. Michel Ysaye, grandsons of the composer, assured me that no score of the maestro remains in family hands.

In the attached table, I made a listing of the works for which I could find scores attesting to an orchestration, finalized or not. There remains, of course, some precision work to be done concerning certain pieces. One can only hope that certain scores (among them some concertos?)

will reappear someday, perhaps thanks to research done by a musicologist or an orchestra librarian, or perhaps in the heritage of a conductor or that of a musician's family.<sup>4</sup>

It must be known that, in a general sense, the available materials and the unsigned scores are often with many mistakes! For the signed manuscripts, the difficulties lay elsewhere. Ysaÿe very often revised his compositions and it is not rare that several signed manuscripts of the same work follow each other over a few years. In this case, a choice must be made by consulting the existing piano transcriptions.

Several re-editions have thus been necessary. I took care of some myself, sometimes with the precious help of the French musicologist, Frédéric Lainé. For others, we called on the services of the English editor Steven Reading of Scores Reformed. He receives my thanks and that of all the orchestra for his precise and professional contribution.

Anecdotally, Mr. Michel Ysaye explained to me why there is an umlaut over the second Y in Ysaÿe. The official family name is Ysaye without the umlaut, even for Eugène. But the great violinist, who had an international career, thought that his name would be more visible on advertising posters if an umlaut were added.

I am publishing this recapitulation of my research on the website of MOLA (Major Orchestra Librarians' Association)<sup>5</sup> and on the French Librarians' website<sup>6</sup>, with hope that it can prove useful to my orchestra librarian colleagues and spare them a lot of work if one day they seek material of Eugène Ysaÿe's.

I am sending copies to the following individuals as a way of thanking them for their much appreciated collaboration:

Mr. Daniel Weissmann, Directeur général de l'Orchestre Philharmonique Royal de Liège, who wholeheartedly supports the project of recording the works of Eugène Ysaÿe.

Mr. Philippe Gilson, Bibliothécaire du Conservatoire Royal de Liège, who was kind enough to let me consult the important Ysaÿe collection at my leisure.

Ms. Marie Cornaz, Conservatrice de la section Musicologie et histoire des collections et archives musicales de la Bibliothèque nationale de Belgique.

Ms. Jane Gotlieb, Vice President for Library and Information Resources of the Juilliard School, who, with professionalism and kindness, permitted me to explore the sources at the Juilliard School, sources which hold the precious signed manuscripts of Eugène Ysaÿe.

Mr. Emmanuel Sproelants, Bibliothecaris van de Brussels Philharmonic, who was patient enough to guide me through the maze of the archives of the former INR.

Mr. Frederic Lainé, musicologist specialized in 19th century French music, who accepted to put his experience at our orchestra's service in rereading and correcting the material of the Divertimento, op. 24 and Rêve d'enfant.

<sup>4</sup> It could also be interesting to consult the collection at the National Library of Russia, since Eugène Ysaÿe often played in Russia. I didn't explore this possibility because, up to now, I've always found the materials for our orchestra's recordings elsewhere.

Ms Mary Judge, Principal Librarian of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, who devoted much time to unfortunately unproductive research. No score of Eugène Ysaÿe's was found in their archives. She could only find a score by Eugène's brother, Théo Ysaye, Fantaisie sur un thème populaire wallon.

Mr. Michel Ysaye, grandson of Eugène Ysaÿe, who went all out to find traces of his grandfather's works. He always answered my questions with great enthusiasm.

Mr. Jacques Ysaye, grandson of Eugène Ysaÿe and brother of Michel, who was able to inform me of the different versions of his grandfather's works and on the arrangements he created.

And of course, Mr. Clinton F. Nieweg, Philadelphia Orchestra Principal Librarian (ret.), cofounder of MOLA (Major Orchestra Librarians' Association), researcher and proofer, who with Kenny Choy, was the first to publish a chart of the works of Eugène Ysaÿe on the MOLA website. More generally, his collaboration in a number of publications and his commitment to MOLA, provides orchestra librarians with the everyday means to accomplish a careful and detailed study in the perspective of an open exchange.
